stockpiling the avant-garde: john m. bennett
By David F. Hoenigman.
For decades John M. Bennett has been producing and collecting modern avant-garde, experimental and/or unclassifiable literature in the belief that future generations will one day reap the rewards of his efforts.
"It is important to collect these writers because, as has been the case over and over in the history of literature, the best and most innovative writing, the writing that advances the art and that in the future becomes the classic and defining work of a period, is almost always the work of outsiders." – Dr. John M. Bennett, Curator of the Avant Writing Collection at Ohio State University (2009)

Gary Barwin,
A gumbo of mumbo jumbo or a sub-rumba via Christopher Columbo
The visual creole of John M. Bennett

GB: How do you conceive of ‘reading’ in the context of your work? How do you imagine a reader approaching it? What would happen in their readerly head? What strategies would you hope or expect that they might use? Would they analyze or drool? Would they seek an overall sensory impression, or parse the visual in some way, weighing the resonance, associations, or possible associative or denotations of the images?

JMB: To respond to your questions en bloc: my "visual" poetry is on a continuum of all my work, and what people see as visual or not varies with the person. I myself don't bother trying to define where it's visual and where not; such an exercise is useless to me. In fact, ALL of my work is visual and textual and oral and performative, all at the same time.

With regard to the piece you selected, your comments on it seem to make sense; as with all my work, everyone reacts to it or sees it quite differently.

I think my art - maybe all art - is a mirror, in which the viewer/reader seems herhimself. I always hesitate to say what I see in one of my pieces, because then people assume that's "definitive," which it isn't at all. I'm really no different from anyone else, or at least in any meaningful way. My reading of a piece is just another reading, and it will be different each time I read it.

The piece ("Discipline") was part of a series made in response to an extensive encounter with Mayan writing, and with Mixtec picture writing. In a sense the whole thing is a glyph, and a kind of picture writing which is NOT what most "visual poetry" is. It's meaningfulness, or one of its meaningfulnesses, lies in the hybridization of Mesoamerican culture with my own complex culture. It's a way of saying the world or my experience of the world in a creole visual language. How someone else responds to, and deals with, this work is not my problem; as I said, everyone will find (or not) a way with it or in it. And that's how it should be. I cannot tell anyone else how I want them to approach my work.

[T]he concept of "creolization": in fact, all human cultures are creole; there is no such thing as a "pure" culture, and therefore there is no such thing as a non-creole literature. I suppose what most people mean by the term are manifestations of culture that have changed recently due to new or changing cultural contacts.

Loose Watch.(1998) 0 9521256 8 4 £10.00 paperback 208pp edited by John M. Bennett, Paul Holman and Bridget Penney with an introduction by John M. Bennett.
Loose Watch is a selection of texts and graphics from issues 1-39 of Lost and Found Times. It features the work of 170 contributors from North and South America, Europe and the former Soviet Union. The magazine was founded in 1975 by John M. Bennett and Douglas C. Landies; the first issue was ‘a sheet of fake lost and found notices to be slipped under the windshield wipers of cars in the parkinglot of Graceland Shopping Center’. After Landies’ death in 1978 Bennett continued to edit and publish the magazine until 2005, the last issue being no. 54. Bennett writes in his introduction ‘I enjoyed reading and publishing unusual work, work that at the time no one else seemed to be publishing’.Lost and Found Times has created its own vital culture which its readers and contributors continue to both add to and draw from. Many of the latter have had a long relationship with the magazine and, through it, with each other, generating a high proportion of collaborative works. From its origins in mail art to its more recent participation at the edges of language (and what’s coming to be called post-language) poetry, Lost and Found Times provides a model of how marginalised cultural workers can create productive areas of engagement within a network of activity.
The cover features an image by Serse Luigetti which originally appeared in Lost and Found Times 30.
Loose Watch was designed by Woodrow Phoenix.

of that hour long performance. There was only ambient light from one door and some candles on the floor, so my video results are far from perfect, though that lighting was just what the performance required.
I am just so happy to have witnessed it: the slow and entrancing audio, and contrasting but complementary performance techniques by each individual, and real in-depth feelings expressed by the interactions & the built up construction of “A Wing & a Prayer”. We had met Rebecca Weeks and enjoyed her performances in previous years at MAF, and we spoke more with both of them the next day as they were decompressing at Jim and Sue Leftwich’s home.
Saturday’s MAF parade was a real people’s parade with a fun percussion beat provided by T.J. Anderson, a local poet/musician/teacher. It began & ended at the community arts & academic high school though rain drops lightly misted over us. I made myself a plastic see-through cape for my shoulders and braved the rest for the sake of my junk assemblage hat. The regularly scheduled after-carnival was moved inside the high school due to this weather – and I was able to set up my “doctor gig/ foot in mouth certificate” routine for a quick examination of half a dozen or so patients, before and after the belly dancers performed in the high school art gallery. One patient, Julián Mathews, even paid me with a serving of vanilla ice cream! In the auditorium on stage was a lively rock band with singers and dancers as well- I think the high school principal was the lead guitarist, though my favorite was the drummer. We had some down time afterwards at Jim’s house to just sit and talk, but we also wrote half a dozen collaborative cinquains, and before we left for Ohio we’d written two more cinquains with our buddies who had assembled for breakfast as early as 8:30 a.m. Sunday just for a final chance to talk & hug (well, and eat too!).

Olchar: I forced my way (in bite-sized pieces) all the way through that looooooong facebook discussion on the 'definition' of asemia that you posted last week. I can see why you say you're growing weary of the term, or its direction.

(c.f. "Asemic art"? what a ridiculously redundant term, nobody managed to articulate how such a thing would be distinct from any other non-objective visual art.)

It kept reminding me of Mark Bloch's criticism of the IUOMA, that the form/idea/incipient tradition has been so flooded with unreflective and uncritical practitioners without a genuine commitment to investigate its context and discourse that its development has become swamped and dissipated...

Jim: i am with you. we are supposed to accept the assertion, for one example, that Kandinsky's works are asemic writing, and not to trouble ourselves over the facts that they are neither asemic nor writing. when the term becomes that kind of umbrella, there is no longer any sensible reason for using it.

Olchar: That one stuck out to me too. And some people seemed to be under the impression that visual art was the term's origin--asking why somebody would ever ascribe the term asemic to writing...

I do find facebook a more useful tool than many people do, but I think this highlights a problem stemming from the nature of 'visibility' on facebook, in which any 'group' can fall unsought-for into the lap of anybody vaguely associated with any articulation of "art" in a way which neither relates to motivated networks and communities with shared understandings of their activity's history/goals/methods, nor the shock of surprise that would prompt somebody stumbling upon it to ask "why" and seek out that context, with an awareness that there is something to learn about as they begin to engage with it.

Manifestos & counter-manifestos always have this potential of course, for instance the ones surrounding the break-up of Paris Dada and formation of Surrealism get pretty sordid at times. But at least those fighting once knew what they were fighting about--you didn't have academic painters having a copy of 'Cannibal' falling into their laps because a friend from art school 20 years ago "liked" something who suddenly considered themselves experienced Dadas because they occasionally drew cartoons, assuming that neither Tzara nor Breton knew what they were talking about...

By the same token, a part of me is tempted to reply to inanities when I see them, but I remind myself that it's pointless, or at least not worthwhile, to do so in this particular context. Same goes with the sniping about IUOMA, Fluxus, etc.

Mark when he was in town was talking about this fatigue and his discomfort with how he ends up presenting himself on facebook every time he tries to address any of this--wanted to try to keep clear of such debates though I notice he's not been totally successful there... a warning to me...

Jim: most of the time i stay out of these discussions, but every now and then i find myself unable to resist. i usually regret participating, but in this case i am glad i took the time to make sure my perspective got included in the conversation. this document may actually be valuable over time. i'm glad that it is as large as it is, and has so many different people chiming in.

as of today the facebook asemic writing group has 6,920 members. i would be very surprised if 5% of them were genuinely interested in understanding the history, goals and methods of the activity. it is very easy to become a member, and just as easy to contribute. people use it as a way of circulating their work. some names get known as frequent contributors. their styles dominate the group. after a while the term "asemic writing" is redefined. i can't keep up with that. i would have to write the equivalent of a manifesto every week, if not every day.
i think the responses to Nico's question, taken collectively, help me make my point. i suppose this is as good a time as any to have a document like this come out of the "community". at least we can still see where it all came from. that will not always be the case.
that's why it was worth my time to participate in this particular conversation. i may not ever have to do it again.

from where i stood i n the early 70s, on the corner acre of my grandfather's 175-acre cattle farm in amherst county, beefheart, dylan and rimbaud all seemed absolutely impossible. no way they could be made to fit into the world i had grown up in. which was why i loved them then, and has a lot to do with why i still love them so much.

Olchar E. Lindsann That's how I'm thinking of it too, which is why I haven't made a point of saying that it's over. Everyone should be included in the conversation, but I think the local people need to meet and see what we are and are not able to do (venue/s, money, resources, time), what the parameters are, etc. before a broader discussion will be meaningful. Probably at least a proposed date to run by everyone too, because I've learned the hard way that trying to choose a date by way of long-distance committee rarely works in practice, and the local hosts need to know what dates we can all be in town and in service. So I think that's the next step. It's only in the last week that I've begun to have time to even think about anything other than what deadlines I have to meet the following day...

Jim Leftwich i agree we need to set a date. thinking about mid-to-late July is a good start. we should probably assume that there will be very little money. some of us should plan to have folks stay at our houses, and we should plan on using some of our houses as venues. then we need to think of how much time we need in one block to make it worth traveling from ohio or minnesota or anywhere else. my guess is it needs to be a long weekend, at least 3 maybe 4 days. so, there's a start, a few places to start getting into a conversation. the next question, it seems to me, would be: what would folks from out of town like to do? and then: what kind of arrangements can we make towards making those things happen?

Olchar E. Lindsann Ditto, Kala! Things will keep happening here, just changing shape and name.

I agree with pretty much all of that, Jim. With a date and venues (including homes) I think the rest will fall into place...

Wilheim Katastrof I said it was the last 'Cause whatever comes next will not be the MAF we have seen in the last four years. Though, i see the possible implications of breaking the continuity like that. Either way I hope i dont have to move that month but i can be a hostel or a venue.

Olchar E. Lindsann We'll get you over here somehow for something, David Edwards! Unfortunately we won't have funding this year. Once we find our feet again, crowd-sourcing might be the way to go. There are enough people who want you here that if everybody chips in a bit...

Ralph Eaton When people ask me about MAF, I've replied that we're taking a break this year. The core group of organizers should meet soon to discuss what we will do next. A MAF type of event this summer would be the first idea that we would discuss.

the high school is no longer sponsoring the festival. that much is confirmed. there has been some talk about doing something in the summer, probably centered around Art Rat Studios (with Brian and Ralph) and spilling out to various kinds of house shows. one of the purposes of this mass email is to start a conversation about what all of us would like to see happen. another purpose for it is to let everyone who might be considering coming from out of town (or out of country) know that there won't be a festival in February or March this year.
the main organizers are at least as busy as usual and probably don't want to think about this very much right now, but past experience tells me that it isn't too early to at least start talking about it. and i know some of you guys make rather complex, long-term plans for travel and events, so it certainly is not too early to let you know what we are beginning to consider here.

If there is an MAF this year (though rumour has it without CHS' involvement) I will be available April 4th to 12th.
As the event draws nearer, we can figure out who can bivouac at Hostel Katastrof.

are these the dates being considered for the festival? i've heard some talk about something happening in the summer, but this is the first i've heard about april.
folks from out of town (or country) who might be thinking about coming need to have some idea of what we're thinking about. at the very least they need to know that the festival won't be in february or march, as in years past. some folks make elaborate long-term plans for travel and events.

I have no idea what dates are being considered or who is considering them. I haven't heard anything about the summer. Since it has usually happened sometime between Feb and April, I decided to make dates I have off known to the group.

i talked to brian at bill beamer's closing show, and then again at the house show here. he's thinking about the summer. it looks like the MAF as we have known it is ending, or a stage of it is ending. the school is no longer going to sponsor it. i sent out the group email in hopes that we could at least start a conversation about what we would like to see happen -- and about what is actually doable. so far you are the only one to respond with a reply-to-all message.

I see, I see.

I'm trying to see if its still feasible to go to Cornwall, Ljubljana and Rijeka in December. I have about 10 days off, but I'm not sure its enough time. Rebecca sent me a lovely email which made me think I may be able to sort something out, I dont' know...

Before the City job, I was definitely going to go as I had 3 weeks paid vacation time saved up.

i heard from Rebecca. she was curious about when, which i expect is the case for several people.

last week in a separate email, before i sent this out, i told john bennett what was happening, and he hadn't heard anything, not even about it not happening in the usual time-slot. someone needs to let the out-of-town folks know that the festival that's been happening for the past 7 years is not happening any more. if only to make sure no one is making plans to come in february or march. once that bit of business is taken care of we can start talking about what we might like to do in its place. and the folks from out of town need to be included in that conversation.

brian said something about doing events in the summer centered around Art Rat studios. beyond that, we could do house shows of various kinds. i was talking to folks about this stuff at the house show here.

“Take me to your leader,” is the first demand of aliens to earthlings, police to protesters, journalists to revolutionaries. But it’s a demand that falls on deaf ears whenever directed to participants in this global uprising. Ask the neighbourhood assemblies of Argentina, the indigenous Zapatistas of Mexico, the autonomous island dwellers of Kunayala off the coast of Panama, or participants in the spokescouncils of the US Direct Action Network who shut down the WTO in Seattle. All will speak of horizontal – as opposed to pyramidal – structures of power, dispersed networks rather than united fronts.

Movements of the past are laden with charismatic leaders – Che Guevara, Rosa Luxemburg, Huey Newton, Karl Marx, Emma Goldman, Lenin, Mao Tse-Tung. But whose face can be found in the foreground of today’s movement? Ironically, the first face that comes to mind is masked and bears the pseudonym “Subcomandante Marcos.” This is the spokesperson for the Zapatistas, whose words have profoundly influenced the spirit of the movement. But he, like so much of this movement, thrives on the power and creativity of paradox, for he speaks of leading by obeying, carrying out the policies of a committee of indigenous campesinos. Note the sub commander, and the anonymity of the mask. He warns that the name Marcos is interchangeable – anyone can put on a ski mask and say “I am Marcos.” In fact he says that Marcos does not exist, but is simply a window, a bridge, a mediator between worlds. He says that we are all Marcos. Not what one expects from a traditional leader.

Richard Wolff, Counterspin Interview, 12.01.2014

After World War II, the business community and the wealthy kind of reached a conclusion: that they had been outmaneuvered by the mass of trade unionism, the CIO, by the Socialist and Communist parties, who had together worked with the president at the time, FDR, to produce Social Security, unemployment compensation, the first minimum wage and a federal jobs program that employed 15 million people.

And all of that was paid for either by taxes on corporations and the rich, or by pretty mandatory borrowing of their wealth from them. And they really decided to undo and to prevent that kind of thing from happening again.

And they understood, correctly, that Roosevelt wouldn't have done it had he not been pressured from below: by that alliance of the CIO—the greatest union organizing drive in American history—plus the two Socialist parties and the Communist Party, who worked very closely together. And so there was a decision to go after that coalition.

The first target was its weakest link: the Communist Party. These folks were portrayed as agents of a foreign power and demonized. When that was done, the Socialists were equated with the Communists, and the same was done to them. And we've watched for the last 50 years a step-by-step decimation of the union movement.

And so we are now at a point where we've inherited 50 years in which questioning capitalism, instead of being understood as a sign of a healthy debate about our economic system—one that exposes its flaws and weaknesses alongside of its strengths and achievements—we couldn't do that, because talking about the problems of capitalism was basically demonized as a kind of disloyalty.
